The Treasury Department is making every effort for early payments. It is now planned to send out 15,000 checks per week in the order of application, beginning August 14th, and attention is called to the care required in examining discharges, relieved from active duty papers and application blanks.

The space allotted at the State House for this work is not sufficient to employ more clerks, but you are assured that payments will be made on the earliest possible date, so far as consistent with the safeguarding of the public funds.

Prohibition Proves a Big Success in Boston

Prohibition is a big success in Boston, judging from the figures given out by Police Commissioner Sanford Bates. Only five prisoners were sent to the House of Correction during the first three weeks of July for drunkenness. The figures for the same period last year were fifty-three. Commissioner Bates believes the figures show that Boston is really "on the water wagon."

SUSPECT NEGROES OF FIRE

Acres Swept by Flames in Chicago Stockyards District: Several Missing

By International News Service. Chicago, Aug. 2.—From forty to sixty homes of white families in the district "back of the yards" were burned to the ground or seriously damaged, hundreds were saved in thrilling rescues and made homeless and the efforts of the entire fire department were taxed today by a sweeping fire of supposedly incendiary origin. An area of six blocks was devastated.

Fire attorney John H. McBride estimated the loss at between $20,000 and $30,000. McBride immediately ordered an investigation into reports of incendiaries.

The military authorities and confederates of police had difficulty in handling a throng of white excited spectators.

Two women, a man and several children were reported missing, and possibly dead in the ruins. Soldiers, police and firemen began a search of the debris as soon as the rains came to a halt.

BLANKS ARE SUSPECTED. The district that is back of the stockyards, where the fire broke out, was a place where negroes, whom the police had been hunting for some time, were said to have been hiding.

The fire broke out in a building which was used as a warehouse for the storage of goods. The fire spread rapidly and within a few minutes the entire building was in flames.

RUTH BYERS TURNS MERMAID WITH AID OF SUBMARINE INVENTOR

Ruth Byers, Writer, Demonstrates Simon Lake's Newest Scientific Marvel

Bridgeport, Ct., Aug. 2.—And Ruth did it.

This is not the title of a play. Rather is it a blip on a record of one of the biggest scientific accomplishments of the age.

Feeling at the bottom of the ocean under five fathoms of water, as comfortably as if on a beach, she was seen by all who were present. The performance was a success. The writer, Ruth Byers, who is a well-known author, was seen by all who were present. The performance was a success. STROLEN ON BEAN FLAVOR.
Miss Byers, not only studied the book on the bottom of Long Island Sound, but she also picked up a rusted lantern she found on the ocean floor.

At the bottom of the ocean, under five fathoms of water, as comfortably as if on a beach, she was seen by all who were present. The performance was a success. The writer, Ruth Byers, who is a well-known author, was seen by all who were present. The performance was a success.

MISS BYERS A PIONEER.
And womanlike, she called the submarine "Gallopers" instead of "pioneer," but that meant nothing to the scientific exhibition.

At the bottom of the ocean, under five fathoms of water, as comfortably as if on a beach, she was seen by all who were present. The performance was a success. The writer, Ruth Byers, who is a well-known author, was seen by all who were present. The performance was a success.

STAIRS TO BATH'S LOCKER.
Forward, on the lower part of the submarine, is a bath and a locker. The bath is a small tub, and the locker is a small chest.

At the bottom of the ocean, under five fathoms of water, as comfortably as if on a beach, she was seen by all who were present. The performance was a success. The writer, Ruth Byers, who is a well-known author, was seen by all who were present. The performance was a success.

SEAPLANES FLY OVER NORTH SHORE CITIES.
Chatham, Aug. 2.—Beverly and Salem turned out en masse to see the seaplanes in action when the seaplanes, which were seen by all who were present. The performance was a success.

WHEEL ON SEA BOTTOM.
Then, most marvelous of all, a trap door is opened and one of the seaplanes is seen by all who were present. The performance was a success.

WALSH SPEAKER First Girl to Walk at Bottom of Sea Tells Her Own Story

Former Labor Board Chief to Address Meeting at Mechanics Hall

Bridgeport, Ct., Aug. 2.—I am the first girl who ever walked on the floor of the sea without a diving suit. Down on the bottom of Long Island Sound the incredible thing happened. In my bare feet with a pair of overalls rolled up to my knees I stepped out of a salvaging submarine with that wizard of the underses, Simon Lake, its inventor, and sauntered at will over the smooth, cool bed of the sea.

It was just noon when we started down beneath the waves. The entrance yawned black and forbidding as I started to descend. Mr. Lake showed me how to catch a foothold in the opening of the tube which swung in between two jutting sides of the mother ship.

THIS is the anniversary of the ascension to the throne of France of Henry of Navarre in 1589. To him France owes the growth of the Protestant religion so terribly blighted by the revocation of the edict of Nantes by his autocratic grandson. More than any French monarch, Henry is the subject of romance and poetry.

HON AND DEARIE

O Cruel Hon! O Heartless Dearie!

Let Our Army Punish Own Guilty Officers First

The testimony of many witnesses at Governors Island proves beyond reasonable doubt that American soldiers sent for petty offences to prison camps or farms in Paris were treated with extreme cruelty or brutality by American guards or non-commissioned officers.

A former officer of high rank in the Arizona militia is said to have witnessed and sanctioned such brutalities.

There were six prison camps: At San Sulpice, at Giverny, at Rue St. Anne, Clignancourt, the "Bastille" and the American stockade at Chelles.

The commanding general having direct supervision and sole responsibility for the conduct of these camps was BRIGADIER-GENERAL W. W. HARTS, of the Regular Army.

Before he went to France he was President Wilson's military aide at the White House. His assignment to the post of Military Governor of the District of Paris was one of high responsibility and also of high favor.

The evidence given by several witnesses before the Congressional investigating committee only confirms officially what the Boston American had heard before from many returned soldiers and officers as to the cruel and unusual punishments practised, not in a few cases or occasionally, but frequently if not habitually.

If this is true, General Harts cannot escape responsibility. No officer can plead ignorance of what happens often or repeatedly under his command.

While the Allies are looking for precedents for putting on trial officers or heads of enemy governments for crimes against their enemy prisoners, it is to be hoped that no official leniency will be shown to AMERICAN officers guilty of any such crimes AGAINST AMERICANS.

There is no precedent in history for a victor executing sentences of punishment upon an Emperor, King or army commanders of a defeated foe. Even Napoleon's case furnishes no precedent, because he voluntarily surrendered and submitted himself to the disposition of the British Government.

But there are abundant precedents for trials of higher officers for gross neglect of duty, or gross abuse of power, by general courts-martial composed of officers of equal or superior rank.

President Wilson should order such a court-martial. As yet only the small fry have been brought to the bar for these proved offences.

Can Packers Be Regulated; if So, by What Method?

The packing interests of the country, which, in addition to controlling commerce in dressed meats and the byproducts of animal slaughter, are rapidly gaining control of the production and distribution of many other branches of the food supply, notably dairy produce and canned fruits and vegetables, are protesting vigorously against the bill of Senator Kenyon of Iowa to place them under stricter regulation.

They are trying to create an opinion that the Kenyon bill would punish them simply because they have been greatly successful.

The best reply is to show just what this bill contemplates. It proposes to create the Federal office of Commissioner of Foodstuffs. One of its duties would be to issue licenses to packers subject to regulations.

Among these regulations are that the licensee shall not engage in "any unfair, unjustly discriminatory or deceptive practice or device."

That he shall not "unreasonably affect the price or create a monopoly."

That he shall not do anything the effect of which will be "substantially to lessen competition or to restrain commerce or to tend to create a monopoly in any line of foodstuffs."

It is open to any citizen to guess how well a Federal Commissioner of Foodstuffs could enforce these conditions.

But it is obvious that they cannot enforce themselves.

Our economic system, apart from recognized monopolies, rests upon the theory that competition under the law of supply and demand will keep down profiteering.

But there are some companies so entrenched in power by the control of raw materials, or organization of all the processes of manufacture and distribution, or magnitude of capital, or skill in manipulating markets, that no competition is possible.

In such cases, where the combination obviously is more powerful than the people, THERE MUST BE PRICE FIXING BY THE GOVERNMENT IN THE INTERESTS OF THE GENERAL CONSUMER.

Relief is not possible by any other method. This was conclusively proved during the war when the government, by assuming control of such universal necessities as wheat, flour and leather, speedily secured immediate reductions in the retail prices of these commodities, without injustice to the producers or manufacturers. In many instances it was only the middleman-speculator who was put out of business.

We have at the present moment a signal proof of the efficiency of price fixing by the government. The price of wheat and flour is still controlled. It has not risen in a year past in spite of the fact that for several months ten million bushels of wheat have been shipped abroad and the world-wide demand has been unprecedented. Still, prices remain stable.

On the other hand, the government has ceased to control leather prices since the armistice. The result is that boots and shoes have nearly doubled in price and the largest producer of sole leather in the United States, the Leather Trust, in its last quarterly report shows profits at the rate of thirty-six per cent per annum on its common stock—stock that sold as low as seventeen cents on the dollar before the war. Here is profiteering, and all the people suffer.

The power to fix prices should be vested in a body of able business men, capable of administering the law judicially, impartially, sympathetically, but fearlessly in the interests of the whole people.

Such a tribunal would not interfere with legitimate business—much more than a government bank examiner interferes with the banking business; he simply prevents crookedness or illegal practices.

More Truth Than Poetry

God Save the Kings

By S. E. KISER

THERE are smirking princes and tinselled kings.

And foolish people still give them praise;

But how do they help with the useful things.

And what do they know of the worker's ways?

If tomorrow the last of the kings should die

And the last of the princes were lost at sea,

Would the sun come tumbling out of the sky,

Or would life be duller for you or me?

GREATER than all the princes and all

The kings who pass where the people crowd

Are the men who work where the red sparks fall

And the men who toil where the clang is loud

The diggers, the hewers, the hammer and strong,

And the men who are hoisting the bolted beam

Where the riveter rattles his blatant song

And substance grows from the builder's dream.

IF the men who plant and the men who plow

And the men who toil where the glow is red

Were to cease their toiling tomorrow, how

Would the world continue to get ahead?

The kings may flee and the princes die,

And the world goes on as it did before,

But man must work where the hot sparks fly,

Or the dreams we dream shall come true no more!

THERE is much ado when a prince appears

Where the people may see when he lifts his hand,

But it's little praise that the worker hears

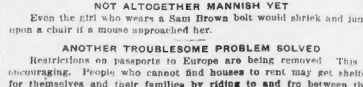

While his task is done or his work is planned

The men who do the important thing

May come or go, and we give no heed,

But our heads are bared for the useless kings

And we cheer the prince whom we do not need

HE MUST NOT ESCAPE

Perhaps we ought not to call attention to the matter, but is the lady who draws $15 a week allowed paying a luxury tax on it?

NOT ALTOGETHER MANNISH YET

Even the girl who wears a Sam Brown belt would shrink and jump upon a chair if a mouse appeared here.

ANOTHER TROUBLESOME PROBLEM SOLVED

Restrictions on passports to Europe are being removed. This is encouraging. People who cannot find houses to rent may get shelter for themselves and their families by riding to and fro between this country and Europe.

DEAR MR. K. C. B.—We got the job all right, and it was just what you said. We could not get out the first day because we moved, and it is a long ride on the trolley, and they won't let us on the trolley, but the next day a man who lives near us and knows my father drove us to Mr. Nolan's studio in his car and they let us in right away, and I saw Mr. Nolan, and he said, what salary are you and your dog asking now, and I said most anything will do, and he said, well, you must agree to feed the dog, and I said, yes, sir, he eats at home with me.

Then Mr. Nolan said all right, you are engaged. Then we had our picture taken and Mr. Nolan bought ice cream for me and milk for my dog and then we went home, and when Mr. Nolan starts his next picture we are going to be in it.

My father says I must and my letter like you do and say I thank you.

How the Kaiser Took It

"For What Crimes?" Exclaimed the Hohenzollern, When told the Allies Were to Try Him—What the K. C. Did for "Safe and Sound."

Once upon a time it was fatal to tell bad news to monarchs. It was fatal to the bearer of the ill tidings. His Majesty regularly had the luckless wight slain upon the spot.

That relieved the royal feelings, first off. But that "I am" done, as they say, in these better regulated days. One tells a king the meanest kind of news and suffers nothing worse than listening to the king's will, if he's that kind of a king.

Doctor Rosen, intimate friend of the Kaiser, or former-Kaiser, to be exact, was delegated to inform His Majesty that the Allies were actually going to put him on trial.

What did the Kaiser do? He was dazed. But not so dazed that he was unable to talk. He talked a royal column or more, all into Dr. Rosen's patient ears.

What did he say? How did he take the news? Whom did he blame? Did he think himself the victim of gross injustice?

All these questions and many more are answered in a graphic story which the Boston Sunday ADVERTISER will give you tomorrow, direct from Amerongen.

When the Kaiser goes on trial he will be the arch-defendant of all jurisprudence. The trial will be the greatest in history. In advance there is this statement by the Kaiser.

Listen—the defendant speaks!

Read the first complete report of what the Knights of Columbus did to help win the World War. Within ten days from the time America entered the war the entire resources of the K. of C. were placed at the disposal of the government.

Which meant, before the war was over—

Millions of dollars raised.

An elaborate personnel, numbering hundreds of men, of war workers, chaplains, camp secretaries, entertainers, hospital visitors, reconstruction experts and other laborers in the cause of patriotism.

It is interesting to note that one of the members of the original K. of C. Main Committee on War Activities—the committee which set this mighty machine of war activities in motion—included a Bostonian, District Attorney Joseph C. Pelletier, Supreme Advocate of the Order.

The detailed report of all this war work, just at hand, will interest every Knight in New England and will impress the general body of readers with the amount of work accomplished.

Uncle Sam has no monopoly of worry about the high cost of living and the social unrest it engenders. John Bull is equally uneasy. Sir Conan Doyle, the English novelist and publicist, writes on the British end of the economic squeeze. He begins:

"Unless something is done, is done quickly, and done thoroughly to check rising prices in the necessities of life, there will be violence in this country."

With this warning he offers a solution.

Out of the frying pan into the fire. We are out of the World War. But here we are, clutched in the awful grip of the war between G. K. Chesterton and George Bernard Shaw.

It is Round Three or Four or something. Now comes the reply of the gifted Mr. Chesterton to the brilliant Mr. Shaw. And what does G. K. do? He accuses Mr. Shaw of having a large American circulation. With bitter sarcasm G. K. says in his latest reply tomorrow:

"In short, what Mr. Shaw is doing is simply to tell the shopkeepers of Syracuse, N. Y., how romantic it will be for the shopkeepers of Dinant to know that their shops may be burned down by the barbarians at any minute."

But you will have to read the whole of Mr. Chesterton's blast to see into what a controversy we are helplessly drawn.

A hair-raising series started last Sunday on the adventures of American naval aviators in the war—the daring birdmen known as "Sims' Eagles." Tomorrow it is McDonnell of the Eagles, who had some of the most thrilling experiences of the entire American naval squad. His air raids over Austrian fronts in Italy and over occupied parts of Flanders are briskly told.

Fred A. Alexander, ten times a national tennis champion, is added to the sporting staff of the Sunday ADVERTISER. He will analyze the game and current contents in his expert style. His accession to the ADVERTISER sport staff is particularly timely, with the National Doubles Championship scheduled for Boston the middle of this month.

From Cape Cod to the Maine and New Hampshire Lakes. From the White Mountains down to the North Shore. From every summer resort of prominence in this section of the country the news comes to you through the great Summer Resort Section tomorrow. Scores of correspondents keep you in touch with the latest departure and arrivals, the summer activities and the chit-chat which is all a part of mid-season life at the shore, mountain and country.

She is a "Swingful of Sweetness." She glances at you demurely from the cover of the Magazine Stand. Penny Stanlaw surely had honey on her brush when he painted that picture.

Will aviation solve the problem of tuberculosis? It is now planned to equip giant dirigibles with every comfort of a sanitarium and to send them aloft as floating hospitals, miles high in the air. The increased lung ventilation, it is believed, will benefit sufferers from lung troubles and from other diseases. This floating aerial hospital article is elaborately illustrated.

"Whom should a man love more—his wife or his mother?" Mrs. Ernesto Carranza, bride of a youthful cousin of the President of Mexico, maintains that her domestic happiness has been shattered by the Carranza family custom. This custom, she complains, puts a man's mother ahead of his wife. This story, with its pretty pictures, will furnish a lively angle to the old Mother-in-Law problem.

Reformers will about scant garments of girls and women. What will they think of the "Slip-Off-the-Shoulder" gowns described on Lady Duff Gordon's page of "Newest Evening Dresses?"

Why should Jiggs do a tight-wire act on a telegraph line? What was Clarence, the Eskimo, trying to say to Boob McNutt? Did Dubb do his duty?

Why should the Shenanigan Kids seek an orphan asylum. Four mighty questions, these, and which the League of Nations could never answer. But the Comics tell.
